The Asian American Pacific Islander Resource Center (AAPIRC) was established during the 2021–2022 academic year as a result of a student-led initiative to create a department that supports AAPI students at UNM.

Hello and happy last week of July! Did you know that last Wednesday, July 20th, was International Chess Day? Chess actually originated in India over 14 centuries ago! We are looking to add more traditional AAPI games to our center, like carrom, ludo, and xiangqi (Chinese chess). We want to know what your favorite traditional games to play with your family are! If you have an old set you are no longer using, it can find its new home at AAPIRC! Please reach out at aapirc@unm.edu or DM us on Instagram (@aapircunm).

Feeling stressed or stiff? Join us for yoga led by our very own Associate Director, Farah Nousheen, on Wednesday at 2pm!

UNM student, John San Nicolas, was recently included in the Wall Street Journal’s new Snapchat series, Future View. Hear more about his experience and his take on the mental health of Gen Z below.

We are announcing the dates for some very exciting events this fall! Look through our calendar and take our interest survey! The next few months hold exciting events for the New Mexico AAPI community! Scroll through to read about them and how AAPIRC will be included. We are in the midst of planning some big events for the fall that we can't wait to share with you. As always, thank you for your support!

The Visibility Blog

About the Blog: The Visibility Blog will be included in future newsletters and housed permanently on our website. This blog will feature creations and reviews of AAPI literature, art, and podcasts from the AAPI community. The aim of this blog is to provide visibility to the otherwise invisibilized contributions and peoples of the AAPI community.
Hi All! My name is John San Nicolas. (Fun fact: “Santa Claus” is an anglicization of my last name!) I am a second-year undergrad at UNM, majoring in Religious Studies and Philosophy. I enjoy thinking about life and what it means to live well. My dad was born in Guam, a little island part of the Marianas. As a US territory, it’s cut off from the rest of its archipelago. Occupied by the Spanish, the US, Japan, and the US again, the culture has been suppressed over and over. As someone born in the states, you can imagine what little I know about what it means to be Chamorro! I don’t speak the language, I don’t know much of the history, and I’ve never been to Guam.

When people talk about heritage and culture, I don’t quite know what they mean. And maybe that’s okay! I could have been born to a Polynesian family, or a Hawaiian family, or a Congolese, Russian, or Indian family. Heritage is – in the best sense – an accident of birth. We as individuals are shaped by it, but it ultimately does not define us. We can honor where we come from, to remember and to sustain. We can also choose to forge our own way of life, as a gift to our children and their children, that they can have what we missed out on.

Last month, a producer from Wall Street Journal Opinion reached out to me about their new show, Future View (you can check it out now on Snapchat!). Future View showcases takes from college students, from the ACT to standing for the National Anthem, from gun control to police reform.

A submission of mine featured two weeks ago. The prompt was, “Why is there such a sharp rise in depression and anxiety among Gen Z?” It is an important question, to be sure. Many in our generation, bearing the weight of current events and of the future, are fighting a battle within ourselves.

On the one hand, Gen Z is not alone. Generations before us have been fighting a battle within themselves, too. In ancient literature, sorrow and unease are eloquently expressed by poets and psalmists of old. Though they might not have had the scientific know–how to recognize or treat depression and anxiety, they have experienced and endured it as well.
We are not alone, then, in hardship. On the other hand, that is not to minimize the struggles we might face today. It is exhausting to live through historical events, to feel as though progress and liberation are impossibilities. To know the damage done to the climate, the cruelty committed against animals, the rights denied to people. Even on social media, where it is proper to post only smiles and not sorrows, we compare our experiences, our opinions, our bodies, to strangers that are just as imperfect and unsure as we are. What is it they say about comparison being the thief of joy?

So, why is there such a sharp rise in depression and anxiety amongst Gen Z? Living through historical events might have a part to play, for sure. Perhaps it is the loneliness in which we find ourselves despite a world of online “community.” Perhaps the pressure of having to know what we want to do in the future is too much to handle. Maybe because society in general has moved past absolutes, and, as Nietzsche would say, we must now carry on without gods and prophets showing us the way to go, right from wrong, good from evil. I don’t know the full answer. The answer is certainly anything but simple. But what I do hope is that the rise doesn’t continue into future generations. And that our generation can come together, support one another, cry together, heal, and flourish.

Orientalism Reading Group

Hello, my name is Mohammed Yahya Rawwas, and I am a Philosophy Master’s student here at UNM. As part Lebanese–Syrian, I am interested in the legacy of French and British colonialism in the Middle East and North Africa. I developed the idea of starting a reading group through AAPIRC that would explore the issue of Asian identity through a historical and theoretical lens. Ever since I began frequenting AAPIRC, I’ve seen it develop a clearer mission, and I believe this reading group fits well with its previous and upcoming slate of programming. I also have previous experience helping to run reading groups centered around Marxist or feminist texts. More information on the text we will be reading this Fall semester is below.
Professor Edward Said’s 1978 book Orientalism is one of the founding texts of postcolonialism, a theoretical tradition which seeks to forward a critique of colonial ideology and its afterlives. Edward Said (November 1, 1935 – September 25, 2003) was born in Mandatory Palestine and grew up in Egypt before moving to the United States. He was a scholar focusing on literary theory and the legacy of colonialism, particularly in the Middle East. Orientalism tackles how this colonial history shapes Western conceptions of this region to this day. I also believe that parallels can be drawn between the specific histories examined in Orientalism and the effects of colonialism on other parts of Asia as well, and I hope to cultivate a productive dialogue along these lines. This reading group will tentatively kick off on September 7th, 2022 (with food)! The group will cover one chapter per week, to be discussed at Wednesday meetings through the fall semester. The group is open to all interested participants in all areas of disciplines. All graduate students are most welcome! If you are interested in this program, please fill out this interest survey. So far we have 7 interested participants!

"Where are you from? No, where are you really from?"
If you identify as AAPI, it's likely you've been asked these questions, usually by a complete stranger. In reality, this stranger doesn't care that you were born and raised in the United States, they want to know your Asian heritage. As "perpetual foreigners", Asian-Americans are often perceived as being from "somewhere else". At AAPIRC, we want to take back this question, where are you from? Use our new map to mark where your family immigrated from/to, where you were born, where you have lived, any city that has shaped your identity! Our associate director, Farah, used 4 pins to mark that she was born in Hyderabad, India, immigrated to Chicago, lived in Seattle, and is now in ABQ. We want to know about the identities of the Lobos who are coming to AAPIRC; come add your pins today!

Mahjong at AAPIRC

We are excited to announce that the Chinese Culture and Language Club (CLCC) is housing their automatic mahjong table in AAPIRC! This table will automatically handle tile shuffling and wall building. Thank you to ASUNM and CLCC for this great addition to our resource center!

And a special shoutout to the members of CLCC who built the table using an instruction manual written completely in Mandarin!
Are you interested in playing or learning mahjong? Make sure to come to our Welcome Back Boba Tea Social on Wednesday, August 24th from 4pm–6pm. We will have teaching sessions and more information on the history of the game. A boba tea bar, selection of Japanese cakes, and fresh samosas will be served!
